We had some great suggestions at our annual meeting, thank you to those of you who made it! As the weather begins warming up we hope to start making some plans for some fun outings on the bus. These will be slightly different than anything we have done in the past, that way we can take every precaution to stay as safe as possible during this time. The suggestion was to take some trips to some outdoor attractions where it would be incredibly easy to keep our distance from any other people, while still enjoying some wonders of western Kansas!

First up will be monument rocks and little Jerusalem. They are fairly close to each other and little Jerusalem has bathrooms, a nice shade cover, and some seating to possibly eat a sack lunch. Keep an eye out for the date for that trip, we want to wait a bit and make sure it will be a day of beautiful weather. Neither one requires much walking at all (we can take the bus almost right up to both attractions), however, both offer the opportunity of lots of walking if you are interested in taking a closer look. If you are interested in this trip, please let me know what day works best for you!

It's almost time to start caring for your lawn

It may be cold now, but cool-season grasses need attention soon

MANHATTAN, Kan. — With much of the Midwest locked in a cold spell, it may be hard to believe that Kansans are less than a month away from starting the year's lawn care.

But Kansas State University horticulture expert Ward Upham is sending notice that cool-season grasses will need some attention beginning in March.

Kentucky bluegrass and tall fescue are the most common cool-season grasses in Kansas. Through the end of the year, Upham said the following calendar will give homeowners a good plan for maintaining these varieties: March — Spot treat broadleaf weeds, if necessary. Treat on a day that is 50 degrees Fahrenheit or warm. Spot treating will be less effective if it rains within 24 hours after application.

April — Apply crabgrass preventer when rebud trees are in full bloom. The preventer needs to be watered in before it will start to work. One-quarter inch of water should be enough for most products.

May — Fertilize with slow-release fertilizer if you water your lawn, or if you normally receive enough rainfall that your turf doesn't go drought-dormant during the summer. If there are broadleaf weeds, spot treat with a spray, or use a fertilizer that includes weed killer. The fertilizer needs to be watered in; the weed killer's effectiveness will be reduced if you get rain within 24 hours after application.

Also in May, if grubs have been a problem, apply a product containing imidacloprid or chlorantraniliprole. Irrigate with ¼ inch of water if it doesn't rain within 24 hours of treatment.

June through mid-July — Apply a second round of crabgrass preventer by June 15, unless you have used Dimension (dithiopyr) or Barricade (proflam) for the April application. These two products normally provide season-long control with a single application. Remember to water in the product after applying.

Late July through August — If you see grub damage, apply a grub killer that contain Dylox. Imidacloprid and chlorantraniliprole are effective against young grubs but may not be effective on late instar grubs. The grub killer containing Dylox must be watered in within 24 hours.

September — Fertilize the lawn around Labor Day. This is the most important fertilization of the year. Water in the fertilizer if rainfall doesn't occur within 24 hours.

November — Fertilize again. This application is taken up by the roots but is not used until the following spring. Water in the fertilizer. Spray for broadleaf weeds even if they are small. Broadleaf weeds are much easier to control in the fall than in the spring. Try to spray on a day that is at least 50 degrees F. Use label rates for all products.

The Human Connection

Most of us can remember a time when we spoke to people instead of recordings, when addresses were for physical places and did not consist of www.com, when "service" station did not mean self-service. We spoke person to person and eye to eye on nearly every occasion. Today when you are face to face with someone, let your spirit shine through. Visit God's house each week and greet your fellow worshippers warmly. Make the most of your human connections.
